- The most important thing you can do to support your child in revision is ensuring attendance at school. Every lesson missed is an opportunity missed. If students arrive every day and listen carefully and practising the skills in English lessons, there should be little need for lots of extra hours.
- If you child is particularly nervous or has not found lessons easy, they can take advantage of the revision sessions we offer after January. These sessions do not replace lessons; they are there to go over the same skills if the student did not understand or wants more help.
